A PORTION OF THE CITY SELDOM VISITED.

Why not Complete the New Fish Mar ket - Queer Sights of Interest

One of the least frequented portions of Honolulu is that comprised in the neighborhood bounded by the new fish market, the Sailors' Home and the marine railway. Visitors to this portion of the city are few and far between, and to one, especially a stranger, there is much that may prove interesting. He will see the actual work of laying the foundations of a large building, the new Sailors' Home, one coral reef and form some estimate of the work required in doing it. Trenches have been dug in every direction, tons and tons of rock are scattered about them, piles and piles of brick, sand and cement are about the site, and when the work of laying the foundation Ahi and Y. Ota. proper commences it will be done in a hurry. It will be laid in cement and rock upon the coral reef itself. A large pump will be required to keep the trenches free from water during the operations.

The attention of the tourist in this vicinity will next be directed to a magnificent shed constructed entirely of iron and glass, and looking somewhat like a large railway depot. Upon inquiry he will find this was originally constructed for the new fish market, and there can be no doubt it is well adapted for the purpose. Naturally, he will want to know why it is lying idle, and he will learn that the appropriation was expended some two years the necessary sewerage connection with the ocean but a short distance away. fish market and seen the state of affairs to all:

From this point his attention will be directed to the vacant space lying between the new market and the marine railway, and to the peculiar formation of the soil existing thereabouts, but this will be easily explained by the presence of the Government dredger $10. and pontoons in the bay and the many hundreds of feet of iron pipe lying about. The soil in this vicinity for a space covering about three blocks is made up of debris brought up by the dredger; and those in search of curiosi ties can spend a profitable hour especi ally in the immediate vicinity of the outpour from the dredger. Here may be found queer specimens of lava, coral and other substances, queer shaped bottles, lumps of coal, and a miscel laneous collection of articles in crockery, iron, bronze and even ivory that had been dropped or thrown overboard from whaling and other ships years and years ago, and at length been brought to light again by means of the power ful pump of the dredger.

The visitor to this district will naturally wander along the shore and at once be struck by the collection of broken bottles strewn along it. There are remnants of old Dutch square faces and the well-known stoneware of the English porter bottles, intermingled with those of wine, liquor, beer and medicine, while occasionally a dainty piece of cut glass, which originally must have contained choice Parisian perfamery shows itself.

Near by are a couple of huts owned by native fishermen, made of old coaloil cans and the remains of the cases which originally contained them. The collection of scrap iron, wire cable, rope and other flotsam and jetsam on the roof of the larger of these buts would send a San Francisco junk man into hysterics of delight.

Here may also be found an interest ing collection of boats of all sorts, sizes and conditions, from the native cance made from a log to the long boat capable of carrying forty or fifty people the latter being a fine piece of work manship and apparently in good repair, fitted up with elegant lockers fore and aft and with a variety of fancy beading of the entertainment on the Boston about it, enough to show that it cost a

The eye of the visitor cannot fail to be attracted by a sign which is chalked on the fence of a resident in this neighborhood, which reads: "Turkeys, pigs, children, ducks, fresh eggs. Whether these are for sale or represent the tastes of the owner as the order in which they should be eaten does not friends, and it will be necessary to be

To those who enjoy a walk in which the Fourth. much that is interesting and curious can be seen in a short time, a visit to the portion of Honolulu above described is commended.
